

GNFAC Avalanche Forecast for Sat Oct 14, 2017

Good Morning. This is Doug Chabot with pre-season avalanche, weather, and event information for the Gallatin National Forest Avalanche Center issued on Thursday, October 12 at 7:30 a.m. This bulletin is sponsored by **The Friends of the Avalanche Center** and sponsors of the **Powder Blast on October 27, 2017**.

Mountain Weather

At 5 a.m., 24-hour snowfall measured 1-2" in the Bridger Range, 3-6" from Bozeman to West Yellowstone and 9" outside Cooke City. At the ridgetop, winds are blowing north to west at 10-20 mph, and temperatures are in the mid 20s. The storm will exit this morning and may drop another inch of snow. High pressure moves in today with Monday and Tuesday forecasted to be unseasonably warm with temperatures touching 60F the valleys.

Snowpack and Avalanche Discussion

Bridger Range   Gallatin Range   Madison Range   Lionhead Range   Cooke City

New snow and winds are creating drifts which will be easy to trigger this weekend. Underneath this new snow is a snowpack measuring 1-3 feet thick with layers of dense slabs overlying looser, weaker (slightly faceted) snow. This was the snowpack we found in the southern Madison Range on Imp Peak (photo, snowpit). Avalanches can be triggered and even small ones can be deadly. The avalanche last week was not very large and released on a steep rollover that was drifted with hard slabs of wind-blown snow.

SKIERS: Carry rescue gear as you normally would mid-winter (beacon shovel, probe) and turn your beacon on when you put your skis on, if not before. Be alert for cracking or collapsing of the snow which is a sign of instability. Stay off of wind-loaded terrain even though these slopes are attractive because they are deep, smooth and rock free, and only expose one person at a time to avalanche terrain.

ICE CLIMBERS: My biggest concern are those headed to the Sphinx in the southern Madison Range. The avalanche on Imp Peak was only 11 miles away and the snowpack is likely similar in structure. A small, 15' wide avalanche killed two climbers in October 2004. Assess the snow and turn around at the first sign of cracking on the traverse.

HUNTERS: Hunters typically travel solo and carry no rescue gear. Their primary line of defense is to avoid avalanche terrain. If you have to cross gullies, do so at the top versus mid-slope and if possible, have someone watch you.

No matter if you are a skier, climber or hunter, the snow does not care. Carry rescue gear and know how to use it, travel one at a time in avalanche terrain and pay particular attention to open slopes, especially where the wind has deposited thick slabs of snow.

AVALANCHE FATALITY

On October 7, two skiers were caught, one was fully buried and killed, and one was partially buried in an avalanche on Imp Peak in the southern Madison Range.
